Working Healthy

Helping Kansans with disabilities increase their income, without reducing their medical benefits.

What is it?

Kansas Working Healthy is a state and federally funded program that provides KanCare benefits at a higher income and resource level than ever before.

Working Healthy is designed to help working people with permanent disabilities take advantage of job and career opportunities, and to offer added security to non-workers looking to enter the job market.

Who is eligible?

If you meet the following criteria, you may be eligible:

- Assets and Income. You have assets of less than $15,000 and net family income below the Working Healthy Program limits.
- Disability. You meet the Social Security disability standard even if you don't currently receive a Social Security cash benefit.
- Employment. You have verified earned income from competitive employment.
- Residency. You are a Kansas Resident.

What are the benefits?

Benefits Include...

- The same as those through Kansas KanCare
- The opportunity to earn more without the risk of losing health care coverage.
- Higher assets and income eligibility.
- Unlimited retirement accounts.
- Increased personal and financial independence.
- Help with Medicare Part D prescription drug coverage.

How does it affect other programs, like Medicare?

If you are on Medicare, you can still apply for Working Healthy as a supplemental insurance. If you are receiving SSI benefits, you are already receiving KanCare coverage through the SSI program. If you lose your SSI cash due to earnings, you could still be eligible for KanCare-contact SSA to check for 1619b status. If you are terminated from SSI, you can apply for Working Healthy.
